I chose 3 and talked to the last 2 customers they built bikes and the team gasoline was really transparent with everything. I wanted a Harley scrambler created from a 1200 sportster donor bike. I had all my references sorted out and the guys did an incredible job, innovated a bunch of stuff I didn't have to both of. In terms of budget, process and engagement was incredible. Couldn't be happier. Wow!! Amazing customer service! These guys are super friendly and helpful! I live in Byron, and the Gasoline Motor Co. team went all-out to get their dream scooter all the way to the top here! Extremely generous in my communication and support, I felt confident and supported throughout the process. And even now – 3 months later, if I ever have a question, they are just too happy to talk. Who guests most liked: Hey guys, Thanks very much for the oil filter and instrument, came here in my tiny little country village in the Snow Mountains just when you said it would. Great service. Cheers, There is only an aquired bike and pleased, I've found a reliable source of parts. Inside look at the Scorpio build Click here at the VX800 Cafe Racer Click here, the Buying Cafe Racer Parts Cafe Racer look is forever related to 1960s London. The magic engine size was 650cc and long tanks, short seats, clip-ons and loud exhausts were in order for the day. Cafe Racers (or better rockers) wore black studded jackets with drain pipes in dark blue jeans and heavy boots. The end of the story. Folklore around the genre, such as record racers, bikers allegedly racing from one point to another, before the record of a juke box finished spinning, is largely urban myths. At the very core of Cafe Racer, it took rebellious youngsters to cut the excess cycle parts of their daily rides, transforming them into stretched pseudo racers who emulated the appearance of TT winners of the old. Did they wind on it shaking, rattling, vibrating lake, bonnies, newt and tribsas around knees north circular, breaking the magic ton before they got to the next cafe? Damn well, they did. Bicycles and their riders were the stuff of legends, so is it any wonder that looks still go strong more than 50 years later as the new generation of Cafe Racer stamp their mark on the genre? So, ok you've decided that you're focused on this style of bike, but need a little inspiration, the first thing to do is some research on the search engine of your choice. Don't sell yourself short and think it's just copying someone else's ideas. The trick is, use another Cafe Racer builds as a springboard for ideas for your ride. Next, being realistic with your expectations in terms of budget, practicality and accessibility, remember you've still got to be able to afford it and ride it. It's also a good time to take a serious look at your particular motorcycle too. There is nothing to really stop you from Cafe Racing for anything (just look at the Ducati Scrambler Cafe Racer!), but of course some bikes will be easier to convert than others. Unless you're going to get the angle grinder and welder out, things like frame design and cycle parts will greatly affect the finished look. Basically, the Cafe Racer conversion will fall into five areas, namely tank, seat, steering, footrests and exhaust. These are obviously just cosmetic changes, but like every aspect of customization, the difference from mild to wild is just down to the depth of your pockets. Round on now, you have to be ready to start hunting down parts, but unlike me, when I went through this exact same process to my 1968 T120 Bonnie (this includes wading through piles of scraps stocked in a friend's garages and sheds) we now have the Internet, so let's take a good look at what is available online in terms of quality, value for money and availability. Cafe Racer Parts Europe Acecaferacerparts.com we seem to be taking good care of Western Europe and the first is . Not to be confused with Ace Cafe in London, this online shop is located in the Netherlands. It is a goldmine of very elegant and well made looking accessories ranging from classic Ceriani front forks at a whopping 2,375 euros to very sensible aluminum back sets ranging from 125 euros. While you're clicking around on the site check out the seat and tank section. Single seat units look great and are made universal fit and special models bmw. Although they give sizes, it would be nice to see a pic from under the seat to give a better idea of the fit. This also applies to fuel tanks, although in this case most seem to have been made to conform to a particular model. There is a helpline available after 7:00 or an entire day Saturday and their return policy looks straight ahead too. Caferacerseats.co.uk is the only online shop based in Sheffield UK that trades under the name Complete Cafe Racer. As well as in the fiberglass Cafe Racer parts itself, owner Tony Garnham-Parks is building some cracker looking bikes using his parts. Interestingly, they produce a series of fiberglass tank covers that give you a classic shape, but fit into a smaller inner tank. Shipping to the UK mainland is free and they ship to the rest of the world. Feedback from their Facebook page looks positive with lots of updates and workshop pics of ongoing projects. Britishbikebits.com With a legacy going back to 1978, Burton Bike Bits is one of a dying breed of old fashioned British bicycle shops that has made a successful leap to become an online store, offering a staggering 30,000 parts www.britishbikebits.com/cafe-racer-parts. Selling just about every engine and frame replacement you can imagine triumph, BSA, Royal Enfield and Norton, as well as Hinckley Triumphs, their range is staggering and the website easy to navigate. Once again, they've got a Facebook page, so have a look around and check out customer reviews and store updates. Kickstartershop.de don't worry www.kickstartershop.de/ in Germany because there's a row of flags along the top of the front page that translates into place in five languages. It was also nice to see Cafe Racer parts host Japanese bikes ranging from a custom seat for your Honda CX500 to a bang updated face lift kits for your Yamaha XV950. Check out their Kickstarter Blog to find the top of the page, it's all in German, but there are some great vids posted. Cafe Racer Parts DIMECITYCYCLES.COM Over the other side of the pond dime City Cycles www.dimecitycycles.com/ take care of the triumph of all Japanese brands, not just Cafe Racers. There's a lot to click around, including a gallery of customer bikes that are good to see what ingredients look in situ. Cognitomoto.com Cognito Moto in Virginia operates a very slick looking site keeping a page after a page of seriously cool processed custom Cafe Racer parts like triple staples that allow you to mount USD GSXR forks on your BMW. There's a slideshow of their builds as a display on various biker sites on the web and the cash ing page says they offer international delivery. Lossagenengineering.com former custom car and truck builders, Lossa Engineering of California will now build custom bikes including Cafe Racers. They also form a series of parts that can be ordered as a kit for a particular bike or separately. Oldbikebarn.com Old Bike Barn may not have some other more specific Cafe Racer-driven stores, but they do cool production parts like whole seam frame tabs. Don't sound like a big deal until you try to find someone to buy. But now you know where to get them. Cafe Racer Parts Australia/Pacific Thirdgear.com.au you thought Cafe Racers were keeping Europe and the US, think again. They're like nuts on them Down as we are. Third Gear may not have a Cafe Racer special section on their site, but typing it into a search engine gets you all the gear you need. Caferacershop.com.au in Australia but going to Queensland, Cafe Racer Shop not only builds bikes to order and sells after-sales accessories, but also sells a range of motorcycles from Skyteam. Ace 125 is a retro version of Honda's iconic RC110 road race from the early 1960's, check it out at Purpose Built Moto Another Cool Shop from Down Under: Purpose Built Moto from Tom Gilroy. Both the custom workshop and the order parts manufacturer. Tom creates a small series of top-quality parts such as LED lights, micro switches, stainless steel mufflers and CNC triple clamps. Go ahead and take a look: Before you start buying Cafe Racer parts on the market for some parts of Cafe Racer but can't get them on the site, then chances are you'll be able to order them online. However, there are some rules to follow when you do. First, if it's an online store, see if they have a social media presence like a blog or Facebook and check out all the feedback they have from previous customers. Something else to look after is if they update their pages regularly, if they do so usually means they're internet savvy and good with communication. Sooner or later, it's inevitable that you'll end up on eBay, even if it's just a price comparison. I've been down this road myself many times and with a few exceptions, have been happy with my purchases. But, and that's very obvious, but, you know, there's a whole lot of badly made tat just waiting for you to hit Buy it now. If in doubt move, or at least check out the seller's feedback, all the info you need to make an informed decision is right there if you look. It's a great place to buy smaller, cheaper items like handlebars, speedos and blinkers. But remember, quality can be an issue. Plus, return is not always easy, especially if the seller is in China. The same thing happens when ordering from other places like Alibaba.com, where nine times out of ten you have to make multiples. It's a sad fact that the Internet is teeming with cheap imitation of famous branded items and since it used to be mainly focused on designer handbags and clothing, now more unscrupulous manufacturers from the Far East will turn their hands on anything, and this includes custom bicycle parts. Done right, Cafe Racers' legacy looks seriously cool and is fun to ride so if you get a ton-up fever, just do it, but all I will say is, Caveat Emptor (Buyer Beware). These ancient Romans might not have known what it was like to make a sweeping bend stretched over a 5 gallon aluminum tank, but they knew the witty deal when they saw one. Gear up and a ton up! PS. Ready to start building your own cafe racing? So rokasgrāmatu! Low Budget Cafe Racer - Low Budget Cafe Racer - - in this post I'll try to inspire a cafe racing enthusiast to start working on his Low Budget Cafe Racer. Cafe riders come in many different settings and prices, from bikes to $1,000 and even up to $60,000 (like the CX500 Cafe Racer from Sacha Ladic). I think it's not necessary... Low budget cafe racing CB750So you want to cafe racing on a budget, this CB750 is a great inspiration. Many of the original details are still on the bike, and the changes are minor. But when you see this bike you still get a 100% cafe racing feeling. That is... 8 Step Cafe Racer Building PlanCool! Are you looking for a cafe racing construction plan? Want to start with your cafe racing project or maybe you've already started? Off of course, you don't want your project to end up as an unfinished project on the announcements website... This may be a little cliché, but remember: if you ... You are...
